Thomas F. Troy, author of "Donovan and the CIA: A History of the Establishment of the Central Intelligence Agency," has been awarded the National Intelligence Study Center Book Award for 1981.

The Center described the book as "brilliantly researched and very well written."

The center gave its journalistic award to the monthly publication Intelligence Report; its scholarly article award to B. Hugh Tovar, author of "Strengths and Weaknesses in past U.S. Covert Action," and its student article award to Army Major C. Kenneth Allard, author of "Intelligence and Arms Control: Process and Priorities."
